

NATO-EU Subgroup

The focus of the "NATO–EU" subgroup is the study, understanding, and analysis of developments taking place within the framework of NATO and the European Union. The subgroup monitors the institutions of these organizations, as well as the full range of policies adopted within the international system.

Junior researchers examine NATO's relations with other international actors, the dynamics among the organization's member states, and the policies and actions undertaken by NATO within the international system to uphold security and stability, and to address both existing and emerging threats.

Regarding the European Union, junior researchers study the organization and functioning of the Union's various institutions. They are tasked with monitoring and analyzing developments across a range of EU policy areas, including the economy and trade relations, foreign policy, defense and security, neighborhood policy, energy, the environment and climate change, and social policy. In addition, the junior researchers study the domestic politics of European Union member states, the bilateral relations they develop with third countries, as well as the Union's relations with state and non-state actors within the international system.

Coordinator:
Agapi Boikou, MA